threatening that she would never again let him come to her breast. But as a rule the biting lesson seems to be learned easily, and mothers appear to have very little trouble with children biting them during the prolonged lactation.

The second conflict situation is the one induced by the adult men deliberately provoking fright in the small boy. The boy has to grow up to be fearless. Before the pacification of the Orokaiva and the surrounding tribes, this was part of the training of boys to be warriors. Ultimately, after being frightened by the men quite frequently over a couple of years or so, the boy is no longer afraid. But, in the meantime, his world is uncertain and conflicting. He learns to keep close to his father, so that he can rush to him if someone frightens him, and this association with his father continues long after he overcomes his fear of strange men making strange noises. It does not seem to occur to the child to run for comfort in these circumstances to his mother.

Initiation into Adulthood.

The initiatory rites are clearly divided into three major parts—the terror, the seclusion and the investiture. The initiation of a girl does not encompass all of these. At puberty she is secluded for a time, and then goes through a little purificatory ritual before ceremonially emerging from her seclusion. She does not have to endure the terror.

What I have termed "the terror" is what F. E. Williams refers to as the "initiation ceremony proper."[1] After being secluded for a short time, the candidates emerge and are shown the bullroarers and sacred flutes. Then the embahi (malevolent spirits) appear to them by moonlight and chase them around the village. The boys' parents cry out to the spirits to spare their children and not to devour them, but the embahi rush around crying out, "Kambo, kambo, kambo!" (Bite, bite, bite!). The boys are well aware that the embahi are a sham, and that they are really only fellow-villagers in disguise, but they are terrified none the less. Eventually, the embahi allow the boys' parents to overpower them and chase them from the village.

After they have undergone the "terror," the boys are secluded in the oro ("men's house"). "... During this period, they are instructed to be honest, obliging and diligent." They learn to play the flutes, and they plait armlets; otherwise they are inactive. Food is served to them by some old men. The boy's nobo (mother's brother), who has appeared as one of the embahi then returns to the village, divested of his frightening make-up, to lead the boy to the oro for his seclusion, and is responsible for feeding him during this period.

The final phase of the initiation is the boy's emergence from his seclusion. Like the girl on her emergence, he goes through a purificatory ritual. Then he is fitted with the kokumbari (feather headdresses), the wearing of which is a demonstration of his manhood. Again, it is the nobo (mother's brother) who presents him with the
